

JAY BONHAM 5 RULES TO TRADE LIKE A SNIPER

The non-negotiable principles behind Jay's hedge fund trading system.

- 01 · Precision Over Frequency
- 02 · Define Your Risk First
- 03 · Size Correctly or Don't Trade
- 04 · Losses Are Data, Not Disasters
- 05 · Your Edge Is In Your Execution

PRECISION OVER FREQUENCY

A sniper doesn't fire at everything that moves. He waits for the perfect shot. Your job as a trader is to identify your A+ setup – and let everything else pass.

Fewer, better trades are the foundation of consistent profit. Most retail traders lose because they confuse activity with progress. The market rewards patience. One clean trade a day beats ten average ones. Build the discipline to sit on your hands when the setup isn't there, and strike with full conviction when it is.

"The best trade is often the one you don't take."

01

DEFINE YOUR RISK FIRST

The difference between a professional and a gambler is simple: the professional knows exactly where they're wrong before they're right. Set your stop loss. Define your target. Do this before you enter — every time.

No exceptions. Entering without a predefined stop is not trading. It's hoping. Hope is not an edge. If you can't clearly state your invalidation point before you click buy, you're not ready to trade that setup. Come back when the plan is complete.

"Know where you're wrong before you're in."

02

SIZE CORRECTLY OR DON'T TRADE

The fastest way to blow an account is oversizing. One losing trade should never remove more than 1-2% of your capital. When you protect the downside with discipline, the upside takes care of itself.

Professionals survive long enough to compound. Amateurs bet it all on the wrong shot. Your position size is a direct reflection of your emotional state – if you're sizing up because you "feel good" about a trade, you've already broken the rule. Size by the plan. Every time.

"Risk management is the only skill that guarantees survival."

03

LOSSES ARE DATA, NOT DISASTERS

Every professional trader loses. What separates them is what happens after. Log it. Review it. Learn from it. Then close the platform and come back tomorrow.

The worst trades of most traders' careers come immediately after a loss. Revenge trading – chasing to "get your money back" – has destroyed more accounts than any market crash in history. A loss is not a mistake. It is information. Treat it like a data point, not a verdict on your ability. Reset, and execute.

"The trade after the loss is the one that defines you."

04

YOUR EDGE IS IN YOUR EXECUTION

The Killshot system is tested. The rules are proven. The problem is never the strategy – it's the execution. Skipping your pre-market routine, entering too early, moving your stop, cutting winners short – these are the real enemy.

Discipline is your actual edge. Every compromise to the process is a withdrawal from your trading account. Show up the same way every session: prepared, patient, and mechanical. The market will test your consistency. The winners are the ones who don't flinch.

"The system works. Your job is not to break it."

05

— YOU'VE READ THE RULES —

NOW IT'S TIME TO EXECUTE.

Reading rules doesn't make you a trader. Applying them — with a mentor, a proven system, and real accountability — is what changes accounts.
